Coburn, MacGyver team up to defuse Social Security time bomb Maverick Senator unleashes the fury of private investment accounts

By Lee Cruce, Partisan Staff Reporter

WASHINGTON (OP) – Our nation's chief executive breathed a little easier last night, as Senator Tom Coburn, R-Oklahoma, and MacGyver, Troubleshooter Extraordinaire, defused America's ticking time bomb, the Social Security System.

“Our nation owes a debt of gratitude to Coburn and MacGyver,” said President George W. Bush.

As the president, vice-president, and several agency officials have repeatedly told the American press, Social Security was in danger of exploding unless private accounts were immediately installed.

However, while the danger was as clear and present as weapons of mass destruction, there was Congressional resistance to drastically overhauling the federal program. Shrieking, weak-kneed liberals were convincing some of the more cowardly Republicans to do nothing, and allow the bomb to keep ticking.

Nonetheless, conservative crusader Coburn was committed to the destruction of the system, and he knew just the person to call.

Angus MacGyver is a free-lance adventurer for the Phoenix Foundation, most active in southern California during the 1985-92 television seasons. He had worked with Coburn for a time while fighting against Homicide International Trust.

At a press conference last week, Coburn and MacGyver detailed how they discovered the problem while adventuring together in the Arbuckle Mountains. At the time, they had access to only a few common household objects: a paper clip, a rubber band and 24,601 ways to cut vital social services in order to fund private investment accounts.

On the scene, Coburn used his skills as a politician and physician to brew up a smokescreen using workers compensation reform and hefty imitations on malpractice lawsuits. This shielded the duo from public oversight, giving MacGyver time to yank out the Social Security safety net and replace it with privatized accounts created out of a rubber band and a fistful of Wal-Mart coupons.

On Monday, Coburn and MacGyver were presented with the Congressional Medal of Honor, but the maverick lawmaker declined the honor.

“Just doing my job,” said Coburn, flashing the “thumbs up” sign.

Tom Coburn and MacGyver saved the nation from a Social Security Nightmare. Afterwards, the studly duo vowed to take on North Korea.

Toby Keith fights for drinkin', fightin' deregulation

OKLAHOMA CITY (OP) – Country music superstar Toby Keith is asking lawmakers to deregulate the state's drinkin' and fightin' industries. The 43-year-old Oklahoma native says government oversight has stunted the field.

“Some times you just gotta get drunk and put a boot up someone's ass,” said Keith.

Currently, state laws regulate the time, place and manner in which an individual may consume alcohol. Keith says such laws prevent many from entering the profession on a full time basis. Furthermore, said Keith, current anti-fighting laws discourage the use of pool cues and broken beer bottles.

Sen. Frank Shurden, D-Hanna, will carry a similar bill in the Senate, along with an amendment that will legalize kicking city boys' scrawny asses.

Senate Health committee certifies Beastie Boys 'Oklahoma's most ill'

OKLAHOMA CITY (OP) – The Senate Health and Human Resources committee met last week to certify popular hip-hop group The Beastie Boys as Oklahoma's “illest.”

Michael Crutcher, head of the Oklahoma State Department of Health, asked for official recognition of the Boys' illness.

“As we have known for some time, they got the ill communication,” said Crutcher, “It is important to acknowledge that the group is, in fact, ‘licensed’ to ill.”

Committee Chair Bernest Cain, D-Oklahoma City, questioned Crutcher as to the qualifications of the Boyz from Brooklyn.

“While it is clear to me that the Beastie Boys rock the hizouse, would you also say that they got the skillz to pay the billz?” Cain asked.

“Word up,” said Crutcher.

The bill cleared the committee unanimously, following a brief pause to raise da roof.
